Radical Light

Alternative Film & Video in the San Francisco Bay Area, 1945-2000

A monolithic survey of a half-century of Bay Area alternative media culture, meticulously researched and edited over the course of a decade by Kathy Geritz and Steve Seid (or Pacific Film Archive) and former Cinematheque director (and current CalArts Dean) Steve Anker, Published by University of California Press, Radical Light includes articles, artist pages and profiles of over fifty artists, curators and historians, and comprises a truly comprehensive and kaleidoscopic compendium documenting the legacies of this vibrant community. Together with Pacific Film Archive and the Berkeley Art Museumeach presenting significant associated exhibitions—Cinematheque's Radical Light programs celebrate this publication, as well as the organization's own 50 year history, with a series of guest curated programs presented by several of the book's contributors. On a summer day in 1961, in the yard of his home in the East Bay community of Canyon, California, filmmaker Bruce Baillie projected images on a bed sheet and Canyon Cinema was born. #### Charles & Ray Eames: A Powers of Ten Cinema Celebration

A co-presentation with the Exploratorium's Cinema Arts Program in association with Eames Office

In 1968, Ray Eames and her husband, Charles Eames made a nine-minute filmed called Powers of Ten that influenced the way millions of people see the world. This cinematic journey out to the edge of space and time and then back again deep into a carbon atom located in the hand of a man napping at a picnic has inspired artists, educators, scientists and individuals alike. The Eames were arguably the most important and egalitarian American designers of the 20th century and contributed to the fields of education, architecture, design, manufacturing, cinema and photography. "Take your pleasure seriously" is a famous statement of Charles Eames and we intend to do just that by celebrating Powers of Ten with activities, demonstrations, conversations and, of course, films, exploring the relative scale of things and the philosophy and ideas of Charles and Ray Eames, (Liz Keim)

Remembering Dennis Hopper: Curtis Harrington Night Tide

Co-presented with Cosmic Hex in association with The Vortex Room [members: $5 / non-members: $10]

Curtis Harrington (1926-2007) stands as an underappreciated figure in the history of West Coast avant-garde filmmaking. Deeply inspired by the surrealistic ethos of compatriot Maya Deren, Harrington's early poetic films works, which recall the work of his occasional collaborator Kenneth Anger, are studies of fantasy and subtle atmospheres. glimpses into fantastical realms equally glamorous and occult. This belated memorial screening to this undersung auteur includes a very rare screening of his 1955 short The Wormwood Star (featuring Mariorie Cameron) and his first feature film, the equally rare Night Tide (1961), starring the late, great Dennis Hopper (1936-2010) in his first leading role. Inspired largely by the atmospheric approach to horror pioneered by Val Lewton and James Whale, Night Tide is a somnambulistic dream film of sailors and sirens, set on the seaside boardwalks of Southern California. #### Recent Documentary: Light Captured/Divisions Recorded

Presented in association with 3rd i [members: $5 / non-members: $10]

Brad Butler and Karen Mirza's The Exception and the Rule is both a complex outsider's portrait of Karachi, Pakistan, and a radical interrogation of the documentary form. They write: "The scars of colonialism, partition and subsequent post-colonialist ventures of improvement run deep in Karachi. Representations of Pakistan by Western media portray a rogue state, suffering from conflict, extremism, natural disasters and sporadic martial law, made more fearsome by its nuclear status. [We] seek to discover the patterns of everyday life, and how to represent them in this environment." Equally incisive—if less reverent—in its questioning of the representation of "otherness," Steve Reinke's The Mendi, views a CBC ethnographic doc through the eyes of a sullen '70s teenager. Also screening is Jonathan Schwartz' drifting yet troubled travelogue Nothing is Over Nothing, described by Schwartz as "a series of portraits, gestures, light captured, divisions recorded and lines collected in Jerusalem." #### Charles & Ray Eames: a selection of short films

Curated by Liz Keim

A co-presentation with the Exploratorium's Cinema Arts Program in association with Eames Office

Friends of Exploratorium founder Dr. Frank Oppenheimer, Charles and Ray Eames maintained a close relationship with the museum during their lifetimes and are ever-present as kindred spirits in the 21st century. Through furniture design, books, exhibitions and film, the Eames applied a very special blend of playful and intellectual curiosity to a diverse range of earthly subjects; from planetary motion and bread making to architecture and sea creatures. The strength of their film work lies in their incredible translation of often complex principles into elegant meditations on who we are as how we see the world around us. (Lix Keim)

Private Lives: Beth Custer Ensemble & the Films of Alexander Hammid

Presented in collaboration with SFMOMA as part of the NOW PLAYING series Supported by the San Francisco Foundation free with museum admission!

Alexander Hammid (born in 1907 as Alexandr Hackenschmied) was a significant if underappreciated figure of twentieth century cinema, creating variously poetic personal "city symphony" films in the 1930s, anti-Nazi documentaries in the '40s and pioneering IMAX spectacles in the '70s. The spouse of Maya Deren from 1942–47, Hammid was a collaborator on perhaps the avant-garde's most influential work, Meshes of the Afternoon. In celebration of this vastly underappreciated artist, the Beth Custer Ensemble (consisting of Custer, Jan Jackson, David James and Lisa Mezzacappa) will perform original scores by Custer to his earliest films, Bezucelná procházka (Aimless Walk) and Na Prazském hrade (At Prague Castle)—both extremely rare lonas from the Czech National Film Archive in Prague—and his lesser-known collaboration with Deren, Private Life of a Cat. Complimenting the performance will be a screening of Martina Kudlácek's loving 1996 documentary portrait, Aimless Walk: Alexander Hammid and the seminal Meshes... (Steve Polta)

Radical Light: Women of the West— '70s Bay Area Experimentalists

Curated and introduced by Janis Crystal Lipzin
Presented in association with Pacific Film Archive
[members: $5 / non-members: $10]

The decade of the '70s was characterized by strident manifestos and polemics, a condition from which artist-made films were hardly immune. But that history doesn't appear so simple to those artists who made it. These films both resist and embody the archetypes that were assigned to art created by women of the time. Each film asks us to look closely and savor its qualities, such as the metered scoring in Anne Severson [Alice Anne Parker]'s The Struggle of the Meat, rigorous & seductive self-examination in Barbara Linkevitch's Traces, submission to constructed accident in Jane Dobson's Stained Picture, unconscious and the corporeal in Gunvor Nelson's Moon's Pool, non-interventionist process in Dorothy Wiley's Cabbage, collision of illusionism & 2-D in Caroline Savage's Voyeur, absurdity of the infinite in Freude [Bartlett]'s Folly, uneasy meditation on the nature of perception in Stephanie Beroes' Valley Fever, and painterly animation in Barbara Hammer's Our Trip. Revisit or discover anew these radical films by some of the women who made the Bay Area scintillate in the '70s. (Janis Crystal Lipzin)

After Dark: Fear

Presented in collaboration with Exploratorium's After Dark Program [free with museum admission]

What are you afraid of? Is it things that go bump in the night or a particular night something bumped? Death? Spiders? Earthquakes?

Experience life After Dark, a cutting edge evening series exclusively for adults that mixes cocktails, conversation, and playful, innovative science and art events. Not a theater, cabaret, or gallery, After Dark contains aspects of all three. Tonight, through film, activities and exhibit experiences, we will explore fear—the line between it and anxiety, its effects on our brains and the manipulation of our fears for good and ill. We'll explore the relationship between fear and pleasure, phobias, fright, flight and what heightened stress of fear and anxiety might be doing to our bodies and brains. After a night of Fear at the Exploratorium you might have a different take on what you are afraid of. (Melissa Alexander)

Radical Light: Bay Area Found Footage from Junk to Funk to Punk

Curated and presented by Craig Baldwin
Presented in association with Pacific Film Archive
and Oddball Film + Video
[members: $5 / non-members: $10]

Among the rich and richly varied filmways of the Bay Area is that rather outré (or is it?) practice known as Found Footage filmmaking, a mode of production that's enjoyed a peculiarly prominent place in the local heritage. Among the many reasons are the living legacy of Dada and anti-Art, a sense of Pop humor about the pre-fabricated, and, crucially, the no-budget, contrarian, yet generous impulses from the Beat, Hippie and Punk sub-cultures. A shifting matrix of life-styles, psycho-geographies, art- and social-histories—and a whole lotta creativity!—has enabled us to discover and share our own uses and meanings for things. A crafty imagination can still make its own way through an ever-more bewildering forest of signs—maybe even swing from those trees! This is what is both supremely ironic and profoundly redemptive about this ingenious bricolage aesthetic. (Craig Baldwin)

Performed with live piano accompaniment by Sylvano Bussotti Presented in collaboration with SFMOMA as part of the NOW PLAYING series, the Italian Cultural Institute and the Progetto Sonora-CEMAT [free with museum admission]

An evening with Italian composer and director Sylvano Bussotti, inspired by the just opened exhibition Exposed: Voyeurism, Surveillance, and the Camera Since 1870. A key innovator in contemporary music since the early 1960s, Bussotti's silent Rara (film) links "filmed portraits" of the Italian avant-garde, from the circle around Pier Paolo Pasolini to the ex-pats of Julian Beck's The Living Theater, to Bussotti's muse Cathy Berberian. In this screening, we watch the director watch and respond to his film. (Frank Smiegel)

Nathaniel Dorsky: Winter Light

Nathaniel Dorsky in person Presented in collaboration with SFMOMA and in association with the Poetry Center [members: $7 / non-members: $10]

A filmmaker since age ten, Nathaniel Dorsky has spent a lifetime exploring the expressive photographic potentials of Kodachrome film. In this exploration he has created some of the medium's most significant and moving color film works. Sadly, the development of Kodachrome will cease in December 2010. As if in observance, Compline, Dorsky's final Kodachrome film, is described as "a night devotion or prayer, the last of the canonical hours, the final act in a cycle." His most recent works, the "sister films" Aubade and Pastourelle, represent a turning point for the artist—his first works shot on color negative film. Each inspired by the troubadour tradition of courtship songs, these films impart the poetics of loss and of new beginnings. Finally, 2008's Winter (also shot on Kodachrome) is an ode to the uniqueness of the San Francisco season: "fleeting, rain-soaked, verdant, a brief period of shadows and renewal." (Vanessa O'Neill and Steve Polta)
